

VISION

On the fall of an apple Newton saw the force that links the stars together and binds us to the myriad suns!

On the movement of a teakettle lid Watt saw mighty moguls climbing mountain sides and titanic liners plowing the deep!

On an electric shock received from a key attached to a flying kite Franklin saw cities brilliantly lighted and powerful machinery lifting stone and steel to build our modern pyramids of business!

Vision gave to the world PIGGLY WIGGLY stores, where the products of the manufacturer, the packer, the canner and the farmer are brought direct to the consumer, thus saving all intermediate expenses and profits; where the housewife can select with her own hands, free from suggestions or persuasion, the highest quality goods at the lowest possible price; where cleanliness and orderly arrangement of goods makes it a pleasure to shop. These are the reasons why the volume of sales of the PIGGLY WIGGLY stores continually increase.

Fresh From Paris

BROWN and green plaid gabardine is used to excellent effect in a long, circular skirted coat just introduced by one of the grandes maisons. The high choker collar and exaggeratedly wide armhole add interest to this model. From tip of collar to edge of skirt this coat is exceedingly typical of the mode of the autumn and winter.

The coat-dress, of course, will remain with us for another season, for there is nothing else which gives woman such supreme satisfaction. The tailleur at the right, very plain in line and treatment, has two features that excite interest—the sleeve, narrow from shoulder to elbow, with its fullness gathered snugly at the wrist, and the double girdle of embroidered metal that slips under a narrow band on the dress. The upper girdle, a straight band of the gold metal, extends primly around the bodice, the lower section, however, slipping in and out of gold-stitched eyelets. The small buttons on the band at the wide of the bodice are of gold.

merely his conclusions, he keeps them surprisingly in touch with his mental processes. As these processes are to a certain extent tentative, the writers find themselves carried along from week to week as partners in unsettled problems.

Critical Months Ahead. This method is good, not for the journalists alone. It is also salutary to the President's own decisions. The questions asked are many, and while they are always respectful, they are not infrequently searching. Twice a week the President is facing a group of keen critics, which is a wholesome exercise for a person in authority.

The clearest fault of the conferences seems to be diminishing. When the President is confident he speaks out clearly. As a practiced stump orator, he is well able to make himself heard. When he is somewhat uncertain or embarrassed, however, his voice drops, and it has often been impossible for the reporters clustered about him to hear his words. That fault is diminishing.

How Mr. Harding will come through in the big issues it is much too soon to say. November and December, and possibly January, will be critical months on the question of whether we pursue any real purpose in international relations.

The biggest of all domestic questions, who is to pay the taxes and how, is entirely unsettled, along with other matters of first rate importance. But one asset the President has definitely made his. He has created an atmosphere of goodwill toward his personally. He has made the public and the press believe that his intentions are good, his nature cordial, and his courage more than was expected. As a man he is unmistakably popular.

He registers but one complaint on modern times and that is against the tendency the young women of today to smoke.
